SILVER CONVENTION.

Mr. [illegible] Beaver of Colorado Silver Convention.

Ex-Governor [illegible] Temporary Chairman.

Governor Cooper's Eloquent Address to the Delegates.

The Government of and by the People for Wall Street.

Colorado Silver Convention

Denver, November 12.—The Colorado silver convention met in the Chamber of Commerce this morning with about one hundred delegates present from various parts of the State. The convention was called for the purpose of taking some decisive steps towards securing free coinage of silver and adopting a platform by which the Colorado delegates to the coming silver convention at St. Louis shall be governed. Land Commissioner Updike and to Governor Cooper, all members of the committee to be appointed from here. Prior to convention this morning the delegates to Congressman Symes' temporary headquarters, who appointed committees.

The meeting was called to order by the temporary chairman Governor Cooper, who introduced and spoke as follows:

[illegible] the Convention:

It affords me great pleasure to welcome you to the capital of your state on a subject of such importance to the people of Colorado and the nation at large as that which has brought you together. Your purpose, briefly stated in general terms, is to force the government of your country to carry out in good faith the will of the majority, and to do that which you believe to be for the best material interest of the whole people, viz.: That our mines shall at once be opened to the silver product of the country so that all the owners of silver bullion may deposit it at any United States mint or assay office, and for every 412½ grains, [illegible] demand a dollar of money of the United States—a just and right demand, especially when you aim to secure such an extension of the coinage of silver will give that metal an equal chance with gold; that also is a just and right purpose. Nothing under our form of government is so absolutely incontrovertible as the right of the majority to insist that their will shall prevail when fully and fairly expressed. And by a majority I mean a majority of people, not a majority of the government.

If there is any class of people in political or financial circles in this country who have grown into the opinion that the possession of their superior advantages of observation, or their greater wealth impose upon them a patriotic responsibility to put a check upon any deliberate, lawful purpose of the majority, it is high time their opinion was corrected. It is perhaps not too much to say that something strongly resembling a continental conspiracy has for years defeated the manifest will of the people on the silver question—a conspiracy that has survived the defeat of both political parties and triumphed against the judgment of the country.

It is well to proceed with all caution in such a momentous matter. But have the friends of silver been precipitate? Have they not displayed a long, a most exemplary, a most patriotic patience out of respect to the slight doubts of a minority, including, it is true, many recognized leaders of opinion who profess to fear that the policy of expanding the currency of the nation on a coinage basis would disturb the finances of the country. The trouble with those persons has mainly influenced the government in its discrimination against silver is that they argue from a standpoint purely selfish personal interest and consider it at what is for their good, and satisfactory to the rest of the country. They are the great money lending elements of the country. Now, nothing can be plainer than that in any given market the interest it will command. A contraction of currency is therefore in the interest of the money lending class. This element is centered in three or four of the New England and middle states, being a closely concentrated [illegible] for influence to a great force and swiftness [illegible] has enabled it to prevail against the will of the country [illegible] been nation. We have agitation for years insistently [illegible] of the people. We have appealed to study it in all its relations [illegible] interests of the north, the east and the west. We [illegible] that for every cent [illegible] of an ounce of silver [illegible] be added to the price of a [illegible], a cent will be added to [illegible] of cotton and a dollar [illegible] of a head of beef. We [illegible] that all the varied interests [illegible] throughout the [illegible] with the interests [illegible] on this question, and [illegible] majority of the country is [illegible] for us now to put on [illegible] speak to the public servants [illegible] in the language of [illegible] know once for [illegible] promptly and [illegible] step around to the [illegible] two checks, for the [illegible] of this country is no longer [illegible] of the people of the [illegible] for the people of West [illegible] the nation shall rejoice [illegible] for all time.

[illegible] that you shall [illegible] commendably in the [illegible] will infuse [illegible] the people of Colorado [illegible] whatever [illegible] you take [illegible] will convince [illegible] that it will come [illegible] to the [illegible] of the [illegible] nothing [illegible] of silver [illegible] speech [illegible] of which [illegible] Dolan House of Pueblo [illegible] report, in [illegible] of a speech [illegible] silver was recommended [illegible] Chamberlin as permanent [illegible]

CATHOLIC CONGRESS.

McKinnon, of the Winnipeg police force, said that Patrick's ticket to Liverpool bore the name of W. C. Cooper. After a time he admitted that his name was Burke and that he was wanted in Detroit. Delaney, Burke and Ryan came from Hancock, Mich., where he had been working.

Henry Plantz, a salesman in a shirt store in Chicago, testified that on the morning after the murder a man came into the store and bought a shirt. When he asked if the sleeves were long enough, Plantz suggested that he take his coat off so he could measure. The man refused in a violent manner to do this. Then he took the shirt and went across the street, returning soon after with another man, yclept and smaller, who also bought a shirt. Plantz said he and his first customer was Prisoner Burke, and identified the photograph of "County the Fox," as the other.

Chief of Police Hubbard testified as to the talk he had with Dan Coughlin about May 20 or 21. He asked the detective where he was on the 4th. Coughlin could not exactly remember, and when asked about the man he sent over to Dinan's to get a rig he told the story about the visitor from Hancock with a letter from his (Coughlin's) brother.

A long wrangle took place over the testimony of Daniel Brown, an expolicemen and ex-member of the Clan na Gael. The state's attorney said he proposed to show that in 1885 this witness had moved the appointment of a committee to try Cronin for treason; that a committee from different camps was appointed, that Coughlin was a member of that committee; and that Cronin was found guilty of treason and expelled. In the course of the talk the lawyers got this matter tangled up with Cronin's other trial for reading the report of the committee to try the triangle O'Sullivan, Feely and Ireland in Buffalo last year. Finally Forrest said: "Now, we are not here to apologize for Alexander Sullivan or to defend him, but we protest that the prejudice which exists against him should not be allowed to have weight against our clients. I protest against anything that will lead to Alexander Sullivan being introduced in this case. So far as the counsel here are concerned we are willing to say 'to perdition with Alexander Sullivan,' if they say they want him to go to perdition. We are not his friends, we do not represent him, but what we protest against is, that the prejudice existing against the name of Alexander Sullivan should be heaped on the unoffending heads of these poor men who had nothing whatever to do with the trial."

Forrest said: "The counsel for the state expect to convict my client Beggs because he was a friend of Alexander Sullivan. I submit to your honor, you are not going to convict these men upon the evidence that they are friends of Alexander Sullivan. If he is a black sheep, and if he is guilty as they say he is, why do they not indict him?"

The state's attorney said: "If some of his friends will tell us the facts and truth we will get an indictment against him pretty soon." Judge McConnell finally announced that he would hold the motion for a judgment until to-morrow.

Sherman Talks About Silver.

New York, November 12.—A Washington special says: "I have just returned from an interview with the president in which the silver question was discussed at considerable length," said Senator Sherman. "I am not at liberty, of course, to repeat the details of the discussion, but I think it pretty safe to say that the next congress will be compelled to legislate further in the interest of silver. I am not prepared to state what will be the character of the legislation. It is an important question and one in which politics does enter, or at least should not enter as a matter of finance in the interest of all classes of people, rich and poor. My opinion is that whatever is done nothing can be accomplished under two years at least, because hardly [illegible] will prove satisfactory to the country. While I have decided views as to what should be done I do not now propose to express them, or the matter may come up in congress and I may have to vote upon it. I feel [illegible] on the question."

Arrangements for the Times.

London, November 12.—Sir Henry Arnold returned to London on behalf of the Paris Herald. [illegible] Sunday. He [illegible] that [illegible] the Herald, [illegible] the Times [illegible] the Herald [illegible] the Times [illegible] the Times [illegible] the Times

R. H. STEWART,
Manager of the GAZETTE.

In a late interview with General Heale, on the subject of the proper resting place of the remains of General Grant, he expresses himself as decidedly in favor of Washington.

Leon Abbett gives as one of the reasons for his success in New Jersey that "the people believed me and they did not believe the republicans." New Jersey's governor elect was never noted for his modesty and it seems he still has a high opinion of his own integrity and general worth.

In view of the unceasing efforts for the suppression of the African slave trade interest will be taken in the announcement that Longmans, Green & Co. are about to publish an authorized life of Cardinal Lavigerie, the Primate of Africa which will contain a full statement of the means by which he proposes to check this infamous traffic.

The rebuke of Mr. Fellows by one of the New York judges for his inefficiency and lack of method seems to have been deserved. It has frequently been charged that the district attorney's indifferent prosecution of certain cases, the postponement of the prosecution of some, and the frequency with which he asks for dismissal of others show at least a failure to realize his sworn duty if they do not give just cause for grave suspicions, and now one of the judges threatens to bring the matter before the grand jury. Notwithstanding the high indorsements which Fellows received as a candidate for office, including that of the president of the United States, his record has been an unbroken one of incompetency and inefficiency, if nothing worse.

With regard to the speakership contest Mr Burrows says that while unprepared to state exactly where his support will come from he is confident that he will succeed Carlisle He also expresses the opinion that "Mr Reed is lacking in the desirable personal qualifications for the office of speaker." There are no doubt a good many people who, like Mr. Burrows, are unprepared to state where his strength in the contest is to come from, and they may still be in the dark on the subject after the matter is decided, but there are, too, a good many people who can inform the Michigan man that his strength will not come from depreciating his competitors. There are some points in favor of Mr. Burrows' selection. He is a clever and able man, a western man, and one who has had considerable experience in the halls of congress. He will make the strongest fight he can by basing it on his good points and not by disparaging his opponents. His chances for success may not be bright, but he will not brighten them by the tactics his expression with regard to Mr. Reed would seem to indicate he has adopted.

The late legislature of Indiana has not left a very pleasant impression behind it on the tax-payers who paid its expenses. It left in its tracks some of the worst legislation ever ground out in a state not famous for the good work of its law makers. Several of the measures perpetrated on the state in furtherance of the partisan schemes of the democratic majority have, when brought before the supreme court, been found to be unconstitutional. Among these is the one the passage of which caused a good deal of comment at the time, taking from the governor the right to appoint heads of state bureaus and institutions. The fact that the governor was a republican and the legislature democratic furnished sufficient grounds for removing the power from the former to the latter. Governor Hovey naturally opposed this infringement on rights expressly given the executive by the constitution and vetoed the bill. It was promptly passed over his veto. The supreme court in a recent decision says that the action of the legislature in making of itself the appointing power instead of the executive is plainly a violation of the constitution and the law is therefore void.

The New York Star continues to claim that the Saxton ballot reform bill, which was vetoed by Governor Hill last winter, would, if it had been in force last Tuesday have horribly confused both the casting and counting of ballots. Previous to the late election in Massachusetts the Star's claim, which is in reality only a defense of Hill's action might be entitled to some weight though simply because the contrary had never been proven to be the case. But the success of the Massachusetts election law, which is almost identical with the Saxton measure, proves both the sincerity of the and the claim of the Star to be groundless. There has been a good deal said, by the opponents of the Saxton measure, about the uncompromising obstinacy of its supporters, but those opponents will no doubt fail to acknowledge that their obstinacy in the matter on the other side has been just as uncompromising and now that the objections have been shown to be without foundation entirely unreasonable. The Massachusetts law is not a perfect one. The necessity for some changes and amendments to it are as obvious as are its many good points. But in the main it presents a long stride in the direction of ballot reform. The most ardent advocate of the Saxton measure did not claim for it that it was perfect and there is every probability that had it been tried many defects would have been found in it but that it like the Massachusetts law would not have furthered ballot reform materially cannot now be claimed with any show of reason.

LEONARD W. JEROME'S POSITION

His Relation to Racing and Speculation in Futures and Mortgages.

Special to the Gazette.

NEW YORK, Oct 31. Leonard W. Jerome has recently resigned his position as president of the New York Jockey club, the new racing organization, and is said to have the finest racing stable in the world—and was re-elected president of the Coney Island Jockey club. And thereby hangs a tale.

Leonard Jerome, brother of the late Larry Jerome—the greatest and most practical joker this country has ever produced—and father of Lady Randolph Churchill, can fairly be termed the father of the American turf. While, of course, it cannot be claimed for him that he is the first man to have started running racing in America it can be justly asserted that when this prince of sports had lost its popularity through the chicanery which had attached to it, it was he who, matched, lifted it again to the plane of its former respectability.

For a period of thirty years prior to the close of the civil war the turf was tabooed by decent people. It was the custom in those times to run races in heats, and it was not unusual for those who found that they had bet the wrong way to purchase the winner of the first heat before he made his second trail.

For thirty years gentlemen sternly set their face against racing. Two attempts were made in New York to revive this sport as the pastime for respectable people, but the recollections of the past were too vivid, and two failures were the only results. It was while this dark cloud hovered over the turf that Leonard W. Jerome, then a man of immense wealth, and with the keen sporting proclivity of a true gentleman, determined upon a resurrection. There was no one to give him a helping hand, and so unaided on the 21st of September, 1863, at a personal expenditure of more than $500,000, he inaugurated the now famous Jerome Park track.

His determination was to make it a resort for ladies as well as gentlemen, to give it a club house surrounded with all the social rigidness of the most exclusive organization, and to make even the suspicion of fraud in the racing of horses not only so odious but so severely punishable as to remove all possibility of the slightest attempt at chicanery. It is needless, now to narrate the successful result of that experiment. Doubting friends flocked around the novel mind, ejaculating only, "We did not know you were going to do it this way." Fashion smiled upon the project. Money rolled into the new association's coffers. Racing was again made the fashionable sport of America.

The story of its subsequent success, a tale the narration of which is only made possible by Mr. Jerome's efforts—to build in New York racing tracks at Monmouth park, at Coney Island, at Westchester, at Jerome park, at Brooklyn, at Elizabeth, at Linden, at Clifton and at Brighton beach, all within easy traveling distance of the metropolis, a story emphasized by successful courses at Saratoga, at Pimlico, at Ivy City, at Louisville, at St. Louis, at Chicago, at Lexington, at New Orleans and Minneapolis, a story that tells of millions of dollars invested in horseflesh, of millions of dollars wagered on horseflesh, and of hundreds of thousands of people shouting and gesticulating over the panting struggles of the noblest creatures God has made.

Fortune, however, has her whirligig. The Leonard Jerome of today is the same true hearted gentleman, and the same upright sportsman of twenty-five years ago, but he is not the same millionaire. The story of his financial shipwreck can be told in two words—Pacific Mail. Jerome Park today is only Jerome Park in name, for the foot of the stranger is upon it.

It is this condition of affairs which has made Leonard W. Jerome's yearly salary of $3,000 as president of the Coney Island Jockey club an item in his financial calculations which is not to be despised. That position he has occupied for many years past. Recently he, with many others, had good reason to believe that the famous Jerome track will be taken by the city of New York as the site for a new water reservoir. The then existing commissioners favored the condemnation of the property.

To John A. Morris, who has made a fortune of many millions by the manipulation of the Louisiana Lottery scheme, Leonard Jerome expressed his belief that the Jerome track would be seized, and that a new track in that vicinity would be immensely profitable. Morris was quick to act upon the suggestion, and Mr. Jerome was made president of the new racing association, which was named the New York Jockey club. Work was begun at once and as the result of an expenditure of between $60,000 and $70,000 the track was made what good authorities claim to be the finest racing track in the world.

But Mr. John Hunter, the present secretary of Sheepshead Bay, and the Jerome Park association, looked longingly upon the fine track of the enterprise of which he is the acknowledged head. Mayor Grant, approached on the subject, messaged with different members of the city government, and as soon as it was known that the new track was open for Jerome Park still forgotten in its old condition, stock to its owners as property. John A. Morris is known, and comes up the John A. Morris, president Jerome Park, that is, holds his interest. Mr. Jerome's door the blame of his disappointment, and refused to have anything to do with the association.

And this is the tale which is told in this section. Leonard W. Jerome.

It was [illegible] the plot was the all in all, [illegible] in which high [illegible] of the feelings was the [illegible] been followed, with an [illegible] change by a school of [illegible] 1860, which was every [illegible] something now, the early [illegible] perhaps, be called [illegible] for the most part [illegible] All this must be taken with [illegible] the earth [illegible] the beginning [illegible] a gorgeous mirror to the [illegible]

WILKIE COLLINS AT HIS DESK.

[illegible] the life and writings of Wilkie [illegible] we see that his method and [illegible] was a natural evolution [illegible] Beginning with the [illegible] of Charles Dickens we have the wildly extravagant [illegible] school in which Charles Duval [illegible] all the fine gentlemen [illegible] After this came that [illegible] of intense sentimentality, of [illegible] "eternal friendship" and all that [illegible] and was satirized nearly [illegible] In the early days of John Wesley all the young people were saturated with this sort of thing and correspondingly [illegible] under the names of "Sylvander" and "Parmelia," "Clovis," "Clorinda" and "Alaric."

Every [illegible] of sentiment had an [illegible] of course many without sentiment [illegible] Q. Anna was "Mira" [illegible] "Mrs. Manly" and "Mr." [illegible] John Wesley was a "Clementina" [illegible] letters to a "Hetty." About the time of the Anti-Jacobin [illegible] this style of novel had reached the height of florid [illegible] and was [illegible] on the stage and in the [illegible] girls were ashamed of it. [illegible] ran to the exaltation of the domestic affections for a long period [illegible] "Children of the Abbey," etc. The fathers [illegible] than all [illegible] the daughters [illegible] to wit [illegible] the slightest provocation, [illegible] and [illegible] on the coffins of their friends. And this style still [illegible] Wilkie Collins made his advent to literature.

He was the son of the [illegible] painter, William Collins, and [illegible] was being [illegible] his full [illegible] was Wilkie Wilkie Collins. Born in 1824, in Jamaica, and taken from school at an early [illegible] to be put in the tea trade, he changed the whole plan of life on coming of age and began to study law. In 1848 he wrote an excellent biography of his father, which [illegible] collected that he changed [illegible] and if [illegible] would [illegible] literature. The [illegible] can easily [illegible] the effect of law studies on the writer's [illegible] and yet [illegible] at the same time that the study [illegible] to save him from [illegible] In "Man and Wife" for instance the plot is [illegible] built upon [illegible] localities, yet the [illegible] "Man and Law." Published [illegible] that time pretty hard [illegible] but [illegible] like the [illegible]

The school of fiction in which plot outranks all else in importance was already decline rapidly when Wilkie Collins began to write; he seemed brought it to [illegible] near perfection. "The Dead Secret" was in the last [illegible] of the new school, and the publication of [illegible] of "The Woman in White" [illegible] a new era in fiction. This story [illegible] serially the success [illegible] looked for by all reading England, and in America a million [illegible] people were the previous year by the [illegible] of the Franco-American war. Year after there appeared to be no [illegible] in the construction of plot. [illegible] of course, there will long be a question as to the comparative merits of his early [illegible] as it is a matter of taste. It is worth resting therefore to discover [illegible] such a [illegible] novel [illegible] and [illegible] explained it fully in a letter to an American lady.

"The [illegible] plot was to get the central idea first, [illegible] 'Woman in White' this plan was [illegible] of conspiracy by people in good society [illegible] otherwise criminal, and then to [illegible] the criminal of an [illegible] and title. This done, he went [illegible] the climax first. [illegible] Mrs. [illegible] the dying scene of Uncle Tom [illegible] the leading theory to it. Mr. Collins [illegible] of his readers in mind [illegible] and hard to find the "other woman," then gave it up and was contemplating another plan when, as he says, "Anne Catherick comes in and says, 'Try me.'"

This illustrates a trick of the mind with which writers and [illegible] well [illegible] Hard, are familiar. The [illegible] leaves long and [illegible] to formulate [illegible] fails and [illegible] the [illegible] then [illegible] from an [illegible] and [illegible] ideas [illegible] the mind, and very often it [illegible] more [illegible] then the one first [illegible] selected. The mental exertion brings [illegible] to bring, but [illegible] different and far better. "The Woman in White" is his most popular novel, and [illegible] is such [illegible] quite [illegible] of [illegible] the public for his [illegible] Charles Dickens [illegible] perfectly right. It is now [illegible] that the novelist like other [illegible] on his first plan and had to try again. This in this case he began with a striking incident and let the characters [illegible] state the facts which led up to it, [illegible] to be a mistake, throw all that [illegible] away and [illegible] a new from [illegible] for the [illegible]

[illegible] of my [illegible] chapters is in [illegible] Miss Fairlie afterward Lady [illegible] Mr. Fairlie, with his irritable [illegible] and [illegible] treasures; Miss Halcombe, [illegible] Marian, like Anne Catherick, are [illegible] the arrival of the young drawing [illegible] Walter Hartright. No; this won't [illegible] to first introduced in Anne [illegible] She must be already a familiar [illegible] reader, when the reader accompanies [illegible] Cumberland. This is what must [illegible] I don't see how to do it; [illegible] I don't speak to reach either. One [illegible] I happen to read of a lunatic who [illegible] an asylum—a paragraph of [illegible] Instantly [illegible] some of Walter Hartright's [illegible] with Anne Catherick, [illegible] the asylum. 'The Woman in [illegible] again, and nobody will ever [illegible] Unknown in it now as I am. [illegible] moment I have done with my [illegible] For the next six [illegible] the pen [illegible] It is work, hard work, but the [illegible] better, for this [illegible] work is its own exceeding great reward.

W. B. MILLER, Sergt. Signal Corps

Arthur E. Carver, sheriff elect of El Paso county, was in the city yesterday.

The notarial bond of P. M. Kean, of Monument, was filed with the county clerk yesterday.

A social will be given by the members of the I. O. G. T. in the hall of the society this evening.

Mr. Charles F. Schaub left for Denver last night, where he goes to engage in the study of dentistry.

Rev. Jas. B. Gregg left for Trinidad yesterday, where he was to deliver his lecture, "The Yankee," last night.

A stag party was given last night at the residence of J. M. Parker, to the celebrated "South Park Deer Slayers." The funeral will be private.

Mr. Will McGee, traveling auditor of the Ft. Worth road, came in from the south yesterday. He was among the passengers snowed in at Folsom, N. M., for twelve days.

There will be a meeting of the Matt France Hose company this evening at which nominations for officers, to be elected at the next meeting, will be among the important business.

Badko legion, No. 10, Select Knights, A. O. U. W., meet in regular communication this evening at 7:30 o'clock in Knights of Honor hall. Visiting knights in good standing invited to attend.

A novelty was introduced on the ice at the reservoir last night, when a young man appeared with his best girl and a bell-fitted hat, the night for lost him in the crowd. There is plenty of good skating and a big crowd out every night.

The Midland train due in this city yesterday from the north left the track about ten miles north of town, and remained there for some time. The north bound Santa Fe went up and transferred the passengers to this city, where a train for the west was made up.

The annual business meeting of the First Congregational church will be held this evening at 7:30 for the purpose of hearing reports, electing officers for the ensuing year and the transaction of such other business as may arise. In particular the method of disposing of the seats will be considered.

Charles Collins will open his riding school at the Athletic grounds on Friday. The general interest taken in the school last year and its success when a new institution give promise of a larger interest this year and still more successful season now that the school is better known and more firmly established. There will be no lessons given on Friday but entertainment will be provided for all who attend, including exhibition riding by Mr. Collins. Everybody is invited to attend. There will be no charge for admission.

It will be remembered that last spring Superintendent Ray and the trustees of the Mute and Blind institute returned Floyd Verger, a mute who it was claimed was also feeble minded, to Denver as unfit for the institution, on the grounds that it was not intended for the feeble minded. The boy was taken before Judge Miller in Denver and tried for insanity and the finding of the jury was that he was of sound mind. Then he was returned to this city but again refused admission. The county commissioners of Arapahoe county have petitioned Judge Campbell to issue a writ of mandamus requiring the management of the institute to show cause why the boy should not be admitted, he having fulfilled all the requirements for admission and observed the rules. Judge Campbell on Monday issued the writ returnable on the 18th.

Mr. Dana yesterday afternoon held a consultation with the police committee and after making all necessary arrangements qualified as city marshal, to which office he had been elected the night previous. In the evening the new marshal met the policemen in his office, and arrangements were made for a better organization of the force. Mr. Woods, who has been serving temporarily, was given a permanent place on the night force, to be ratified by the police board and council. Mr. Cunningham, now No. 1 on the day force, is transferred to the captaincy of the night force, and will have his headquarters at the city hall. It will be his duty to respond to calls for assistance from the other police, ring the fire bell properly and have general charge of the police at night. Officer Wilson, of the night force, is transferred to the day force. Mr. Dana will have his office in his old room up stairs, occupying it in conjunction with the city magistrate.

Some days ago a quantity of clothing was stolen from the residence of Mr. Curtis at Manitou. The officers were informed and a description of the men given. On Monday night six men went into Casaday's beer garden, south of town, and offered an overcoat and other clothing for sale. It was instantly suspected that they were stolen property and were purchased for $2.50, being worth probably $30. The police were informed of the matter, and yesterday afternoon the men were recognized again along the D. & R. G. railroad track south of town. Marshal Dana was informed and taking a squad of policemen scoured the tracks, returning with two of the men. Four of the men had come into the city in the meantime, and Policeman Woods observing some queer actions on their part while they were examining a quantity of clothing which they had in front of D. W. Bradley's store, spotted them. Soon they entered a restaurant on Huerfano street and the officer getting an opportunity arrested the whole lot. One, however, managed to get away in the confusion. They were placed in the city jail to await further identification.

BIRD.

Drake—In this city on Nov. 12, 1889, Fannie, wife of Joseph Drake, aged 35 years and 10 days.
